The Battle for Dunkirk

The Battle of Dunkirk took place in May 1940 during World War II. British and Allied troops were trapped on the beaches of Dunkirk, France, by the advancing German army. Facing a dire situation, the British organized Operation Dynamo, a massive evacuation effort. A motley fleet of civilian and military vessels, including small boats, ferried over 300,000 troops across the English Channel to safety in Britain. This evacuation, though accompanied by heavy losses, was a crucial success for the Allies, saving a substantial portion of their forces.
